

Bisse du Rho and Grand Bisse de Lens

Is it the neighbourhood of Montana and the fact that neophytes are sometimes tempted to travel it that the Bisse du Rho has a terrible reputation? I can not answer this question. What I can however say is that this reputation is inflated. Sure, some sections are dizzy, but its travelling does not display insurmountable problems. On the most exposed sections a guardrail reassure the hiker.

The Bisse du Rho is especially known from the archive pictures that one can look at in the references books that one can find on the subject. Only another Bisse seems to have been more impressive: the Bisse de Savièse at the Brenlires and Sapin section.

Traditionally, the Bisse du Rho is done reaching finally the Rawyl dam. Here, we will go down in order to cross below Pra du Taillour and reach the Grand Bisse de Lens. This one, even if it is a bit less dizzy than the Bisse du Rho, is technically somewhat more difficult. Only the section below Châtelard is really impressive. But we will not travel this section.
