

The Toblerones Path

The Toblerones path has been named this way, because the anti-tank defence line that this path follows reminds of this famous chocolate.

This defence line was built during the dark times of last world war. Its building has been done in successive steps starting by ramming rails into the ground. This defence line was the first important one on western Switzerland and should have slowed down the eventual invader from this side.

As the line follows the Promenthouse river, the path offers a magnificent outing when the conditions are not ideal in the mountains.
